Speedy and Easy Riding

There's little comfort in most low priced cars. You can't use their speeds. They jostle you—they ride roughly—they don't hold the road.

The $635 Overland is different. It is not only the speediest of low priced cars-

But you can use the full speed of its powerful motor when you need it.

It has long 42-inch, easy riding, shock absorbing cantileverrear springs. In addition the 75 B Overland is a longer car-104inch wheelbase. And it has 4-inch tires.

Its smoothness and ease of riding at any speed would do justice to a much larger and heavier car.

Come in and let us demonstrate. That's the best kind of proof.

THE STORY OF EUGENE ARAM

CERTAIN romantic features of the Crime and trial of Eugene Aram appealed to Thomas Hood and Bulwer Lytton, so the one wrote a poem and the other a book, about the murderer, with the result that the name of a mains a household word, and is con sidered something to conjure with by lawyers and orators. So much sym-pathy for Eugene was created by Hood's been that determined effort have been made, at various times, and by various writers, to prove that be him was too conclusive to be argued away. One little matter has always been overlooked by his defenders. On away. the morning of the day that saw his execution, he admitted that he deserved his punishment, and attempted to commit suicide with a razor.

One balmy day in 1759 some intell ent British workmen were engaged in ligging our stone in a quarry near Knaresborough, when they came up-on a human skeleton. The bones were-reverently-collected and taken to town ing contest as to whose they might be; then one of the oldest inhabitants concenhered that a man named Daniel Clark had mysteriously disappeared some fifteen years before. Daniel had a rather rancid reputation, and had caused the local constables some annoyance, so it was taken for granted, "I've when he dropped out, that he had fleas." sought a change of climate. However, now that the bones were found, everybody felt quite sure that he must have man named Houseman, and somebody else was sure that when Clark was last seen he was in Houseman's com-Dany.

Mr. Houseman, who also had a somewhat ragged reputation, still in-fested the community, so he was rounded up by the centurions and ask ed to explain the disappearance of his old-time running mate. At first he professed to be greatly shocked that any-body would think him guilty of contributing to Daniel's disappearance His righteous indignation was worth going miles to see. But when he had spent a few days in the village tolbooth, his conscience got in its and he made a confession. The bones which had been dug up were not those of Daniel Clark. He didn't know whose they were. Daniel was buried in an entirely different place, and he guided the officers to the proper spot. They went to work with spades and dug up the bones of the late Mr. Clark. That he had been murdered was obvious. Some of his bones were fractured and his skull had been caved in.

In the excitement and enthusiasm over this discovery the original bones were forgotten, and the mystery they represented never was cleared up. They also indicated a murder, but the sea must give up its dead before the identity of the victim will be established. Then Mr. Houseman made an elabcrate explanation of the whole busia general scheme of swindling. Aram, who was educated and clever, directed operations, and Clark and Houseman did the coarse work. Aram wasn't exactly popular with his associates. He was domineering and treated them contemptuously. He spent his even-ings in his cottage, reading and studying, while they were out rustling, and then they had to call upon him and divide the spoil. Naturally, they felt that their faces were being ground by the fron beel of tyranny.

Aram and Clark went on ahead, into a field. Presently Houseman heard, them quarreling, and then heard the sickening thud of a club striking human flesh. He ran to the scene of the disturbance and found Clark lying dead. Houseman was badly rattled and ran away. The next day he visited Aram's cottage, and Eugene threatened him with all kinds of catastrophes if he spoke of what he had seen. Knowing that Eugene was dangerous, Mr. Houseman preserved a masterly silence, and the murderer moved away from the neighborhood. The village sleuths got husy and traced him to King's Lynn, where he was quietly employed as an usher in a school, and from that school he was led forth "with gives upon his wrists," He made a strenuous-defense when placed upon trial. There is no record that he ever denied committing the crime, but he tried to prove his inno-cence by technical stratagem. The wenk point of the prosecution was that the only direct evidence against him was the testimony of Houseman, and it was generally agreed that Houseman contant-tell the truth-with out undergoing a severe strain. Aram's first contention was that the bones were those of a woman, but the medient practitioners soon disposed of that, There were many witnesses who testi-fied to the good character of the prisoner, and Aram cried out passionately that his days were honestly laborious, his nights intensely studious. The his lawyers tried to show that the condition of the bones didn't necessar-ily indicate murder. The bones of this skeleton were fractured, but so were those of the Archbishop of York when exhumed in 1723, and he certainly was not murdered. Every trick known to the lawyers of that period was resort ed to, but all in vain. The jury found im guilty and Aram was to be cell to await the executioner. This is the treety of a crime which was sordid in itself, a crime committed by a man who had no other claim distinction than a handsome face and an education better than the co mon. Yet, after a century and a half, crime and criminal still live in song and story because they happened to engage the attention of two great

It is a fascinating experience to visit Santo Domingo and wander amid the ruins of the ancient city, from the fortifications of Homenaje, the oldest in the new world, to the first stone church built on this side of the Atlantic, and to the tomb of the great discoverer. Nowhere else in this hamtsphere are there scenes fraught with more historical significance to Americans than here, where Columbus had his bour of triumph and his hour of had been associated for some time in sorrow, and where, when he had embarked upon the great voyage from which he would never return to endure the fickle favor of petty princes, his ashes finally found repose.

Curiosities of Etymology.

It is extraordinary how words for the same thing differ in even so small a country as England. Take "Taff handed," for example. In Gloucestershire such a person is described as "scrammy," comes "craggy." The phrase for a left banded Yorkshireman is "gawkrodger" or "callick handed," and in the next county, Durbam, he is "cuddy paw.".

IRISH LINE IS SOMETHING OF CURIOSITY.

Only Ten Miles in Length, but System Employed Makes It Unique—"At-mospheric Railroad" is Another Freak idea.

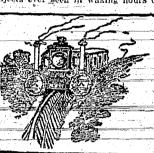

The most curious railroad in existence today is, without a doubt, the Listowel & Ballybunion railroad, in the west of Ireland. This little line, whose length is only ten miles, is quaint alike in its name and in the system employed.

Although an Irlsh railroad, the system is the invention of a French engineer, and is known as the "Lartigue single rail elevated railroad." The "single rail," it should be added, does not mean a single track railroad. It actually has only one rail for engine and train to run on. The rail is supported on iron trestles from the ground, and the locomotive and train are actually balanced on it. The carriages hang down on each side sitting back to back, All this is sufficiently curious, but at a height of three feet three inches

the locomotives of this extraordinary line are the most eccentric looking of objects ever seen in waking hours or out of nightmares. They are bull with twin boilers and smokestneks, and between them is a huge headlight resembling those in use on American and Canadian railrand There has always been some ques

The generally-received opinion is that this was the gauge in use at the collieries when George "I've heard a lot about trained Stephenson first conceived the idea of the locomotive engine.

Social and economic conditions in sermany have undoubtedly been greatly disturbed by the war, but a lofty de ermination to continue to do all things in the regular way is indicated in an urticle in a late copy of the Elberfeld (Prussia) Kurier, concerning the proper demeanor of the present street ruilroud employees toward their superiors, remarks the Cincinnati Times-Star. The berries of the deadly nightshade (atropa belladonna), now ripe, are such a tempting fruit for children that they and their parents ought to know the plant and the terrible danger of eating its berries. These are the source from which the poisons atropine and beliadonna are made.

The deadly nightshade grows from three to five feet high on strong, branched, purple-colored stems. pointed, oval leaves vary in size and stand in pairs on short foot staiks The flowers are purple, pendent and bell-shaped. the barytone singer uses far more energy than the tenor and that the bass singer uses more force than either.

The range of voices differs greatly, so the percentage varies to the same extent, but as a general result it was proved that the tenor uses only from one-seventh to one-sixteenth of the lung power of the barytone or bass. The difference between the force used by the contraito and the soprano is also marked, and the contraito who sings in very deep tones uses at least ten times the force of the thrilling soprano.

The explanation is so simple that it is surprising that the investigation was not made long ago. It has long been known that the tenor or soprano brings the vocal cords close together and keeps the edges only vibrating by the emission of air. The bass or contraito leaves the space beween the cords wider open and has to vibrate very much more of the membranes, so that a considerably larger amount of the space beyond the cords with high squeaky voices.
